STUDIES IN THE MEDIEVAL HISTORY OF DIYARBEKR PROVINCE:
SOME NOTES ON THE SOURCES AND LITERATURE
MEHMET MEHDI İLHAN

The sources and literature on the medial history of Diyarbekr region are limited as it is the general case with the medieval history of Anatolia on the whole. Apart from few sources which are, however, directly related to the area there are other sources from which indirect information can be derived to study the history of the area. In order to avoid confusion, however, no such classification will be made, rather they will be treated under original or primary sources, secondary literature and Armenian and Syriac sources. Before examining them, nevertheless, it would perhaps be better to briefly mention few works and bibliographies in which there can be found a good literature on the area.

The literature found in J.D. Pearson’s Index Islamicus, C.A. Storey’s Persian Literature, E. G. Browne’s Literary History of Persia and M.S. Özege’s Eski Harflerle Basılmış Türkçe Eserler Kataloğu are scant. Therefore one should thoroughly examine the footnotes and bibliographies in the works which are directly related to the area. The most important of these works are Gabriel’s Voyages Archeologiques dans la Turque Orientale and Bercham’s Amida.

Apart from these last two works the literature should carefully be sought through I.H. Uzunçarşılı’s Anadolu Beylikleri, F. Sümer’s Kara Köyünlular, N. Göyünc’s XVI. Yüzyılda Mardin Sancağı, Artuk’s Istanbul Arkeoloji Müzeleri Teşhirde ki İslami Sikkeler Kataloğu, A. K. Sanjian’s Colophons of Armenian Manuscripts, 1301-1480, and perhaps D.K. Kouynijian’s A Numismatic History of Southern Caucasus and Adharbajjan based on the Islamic Coinage of the 5th/11th to the 7th/13th Centuries. There are few articles which also contain valuable sources and literature. These are Erzi’s “Akkoyunlu ve Kara köyünlu Tarihi Hakkında Araştırmalar”, Sevim’s “Artukluların Soyu

1 A Ph. D. Thesis submitted to the Faculty of Philosophy, Colombia University in 1969. The transcription alphabet of Islam Ansklopedisi is followed in this article.
2 BELLETEN, 70, 1954.
ve Artuk Bey'in Siyasi Faaliyetleri', 'Artukoğlu Sökmen'in Siyasi Faaliyetleri', and 'Artukoğlu İlçiği', and Köprülü's "Anadolu Selçukluları Tarihinin Yerli Kaynakları". An evaluation and criticism of these works will be made wherever appropriate and the other works, books and articles which contain a good bibliography will be pointed out.

PRIMARY SOURCES

I - MANUSCRIPTS:

i) Arabic;

With the exclusion of Kitāb-i Diyarbekriyye, in Persian, which is already edited and published, the Arabic manuscripts are the most important for the study of the area. Ahmed b. Yusuf b. ‘Ali b. al-Azrak b. al-Faruki’s Tārīḥ-i Meyyāfəriqin ve Āmid probably is the most valuable of them. There are two copies of this manuscript in the British Museum; a large one (Or. 5803) is 290 folios and a small one (Or. 630) is 140 folios. The first part of this work on the Merwanids has already been edited as a Ph. D. thesis at Cambridge University by an Egyptian. The second part of the work on the Artukids was edited in 1975 as a Ph.D. thesis by A. Savran at the University of St. Andrews, England.

Tarih-i Fariği mainly being on the history of Meyyafariqin, according to the author relates whatever there is about the history of the town from its foundation up to his own period. Of course this also would me-

---

3 Ibid., 26, 1962.
4 Ibid.
5 Ibid.
6 Ibid., 7(1), 1943.
8 A Descriptive List. of the Arabic Manuscripts by the trustees of the British Museum since 1894 by A. G. Ellis and Edward Edwards, London 1912. There is also one copy in M. H. Yinanç’s private library. See art. "Diyarbekir" in IA.
11 Ibid., p. vi; Whether Ibn al-Azraq was the author see the same page.
an that there is abundant information on the history of Diyarbekr region itself. In fact the work has much more information, if. 8a-85b are on the early Muslim conquest, if. 85a-122a are on the history of the Abbasids Caliphate and if. 121a-200 which comprise the second big part of the manuscripts are wholly on the Merwanid and Artukid dynasties. Al-Faruki in writing the history of the Artukids becomes independent of the sources since he was witness to the most of the events. Therefore, it is reasonable to suggest that this work is more reliable source for the history of the Artukids than that of Merwanids since the latter lost power to the Selçukids in 478/1085 and the author (510-573/1116-1177) most probably did not start writing his work until towards the very end of the first half of the 12th century. In fact Tutu§ captured Meyyafarikin from the Merwanids in 486/1093 and Mahmud, the Selçukid Sultan gave it as an iktla' to the Artukid Ilgazi in 515/1121. It should also be noted that the work contains the events up to 572/1176.

In compiling his work Ibn al-Azrak b. al-Faruki had relied widely on the works of his predecessors as well as oral tradition. Unfortunately by deriving his information from the latter he must have fallen into grave errors on the events happened before his lifetime. Various authors have used also his work as a source of information.

The chronicle of Hisn-i Keyfa is another manuscript of great importance, which up to now has only been used by Cahen and Sümër. Cahen who had discussed the context of the manuscript in detail, but probably not made much use of it, was the first to introduce it to the scholastic circles. Sümër has only made use of it when examining the political activities of Bayram Hoca in al-Cezire and Mesopotamia. There is only one copy of this work and that is in the National Library at Vienna (Mxt. 355). This copy, however, includes the events only up to 778/1376, whereas the chronicle was completed in 821/1418 and was presented to al-Melik al-'Adil Fahr al-Din Süleyman, the ruler of Hisn-i Keyfa. The original work, therefore, must have included the events up to 820/1417.

The author of this chronicle, which is entitled Nuzhat al-Nazir ve Râhet al-Hâtr al-Muhtasar (fi câmi` al-tevâri`h ve al-suğar) min Kitâb Gâyet al-

12 i.e. on the History of Georgia see D. K. Kouynijian, op. cit., pp. 28-29; On al-Faruki's visit to Georgia see Awad, op. cit., pp. 2-7
Matlûb fi (cam) Târîh beyt Eyyûb, is unknown, However, we know that he was the grandson of a certain Haci ʿAbdullâh b. Muḥammed called Ibn al-Mevârdi, who had been one of the notables of the Ayyubid principality since before 742/1341. The work has information not only on the Ayyubids of Hisn-i Keyfâ, but also on the Mongols, Artukids, Karakoyunlus, Akkoyunlus. In the work there are quotations from the court poets and the mention of the excursions outside the Ayyubid territory.

The work of ʿAbdullâh b. Fethullâh al-Baġdâdî, a 15th century author, entitled Târîh al-Ǧiyâṣi after his nickname, has very valuable information on the Jelâyîrids, Karakoyunlus and Akkoyunlus. Unfortunately the only manuscript of this work is in a private library in Iraq. So far only al-Azzawi and Sümer have made use of it, and according to them there are lot of errors in the manuscript; therefore it should be read critically. According to al-Azzawi the author of the manuscript was still alive in 891/1486 and probably died few years later. This would mean that the author was witness to the most of the events occurred during the 15th century. Infact the author himself claims that his work is original for that century.

Al-Ǧiyâṣi just like many other historians of medieval period wrote a general history of medieval period from Adam upto almost the end of the 15th century.

ʿIzz al-Dîn Ebû ʿAbdullâh b. al-Ḥalabî better known as Ibn Şeddâd (613-684/1217-1285) is the author of al-Ṣâm ve al-Ǧezûr in two big volumes. The first volume is on Damascus and Aleppo. The chapters on Damascus have already been published in two volumes by S. al-Dahhan. The context of the unpublished chapters on Aleppo has been discussed by Sevim who read them through in two different manuscripts; one in Ayasofya Library (No. 3084) and the other in

---

16 Cl. Cahen, op. cit., p. 66.
18 F. Sümer, op. cit., p. 9.
19 On the life of Ibn Şeddâd see both El2 and IA.
Topkapı Sarayı Revan Köşkü Library (No. 1564)\textsuperscript{21}. It appears that there were two biographical supplements, which have not come down to us, on the rulers of both Damascus and Aleppo.

The second volume of Ibn Şeddâd’s work which concerns us here most is in three subsequent parts; on Diyārbekr, Diyār-ı Mudar, and Diyâr-ı Rabî’a. We are not certain whether this volume was really written by Ibn Şeddâd. Amedroz, Sevim, Cl. Cahen and Awad believe it was so\textsuperscript{22} and hence attribute the manuscript (Marsh 333) of Bodleian Library to him. The manuscript (Marsh 333) on the whole deals with the historical and geographical description of Mesopotamia including al-Cezire from its Muslim conquest until 679/1280, the date when the manuscript was compiled. The main concentration is on the Merwanids and Artukids. It appears that the author had used Ibn al-Azrak’s work as his main source on these two dynasties. Nevertheless, he carries the local history more than a century further than Ibn al-Azrak i.e. Ibn Şeddâd’s work ends up with the year 1280 whereas that of Ibn al-Azrak’s with 1176. Then this manuscript could well be considered as the continuation of Ibn al-Azrak’s \textit{History of Meyyâfîrîn}. In fact Ibn Şeddâd has given the description of so many towns and fortresses in al-Cezire that could be found in no other work.

Ibn Şeddâd, apart from Ibn al-Azrak’s work, had made use of the works of Ibn al-Kalanisi, Ibn al-‘Adîm and also Bahâ al-Dîn Ebu al-Mehâsin Yusuf b. Raîî b. Temîrî b. Şeddâd’s work \textit{Ahbûr Şalâh al-Dîn}\textsuperscript{23}.

The rest of Arabic manuscripts to be discussed are not as important, but include some information which could be found in the manuscripts already discussed.

The universal history of al-Karamânî whose full name is Ahmed b. Yusuf b. Ebu \textsuperscript{'}Abbâs al-Dîmaşki\textsuperscript{24} includes some information on the regi-

\textsuperscript{22} Cl. Cahen, “La Djazira au milieu du Treizième siècle d’apres ‘Izz-ad Din Ibn Chaddad”, \textit{Revue des études Islamiques}, viii, 1934, pp. 109-128; The other copies which may be confused with Marsh 333 are Br. Mus., Add. 23334 (has no similarity to Marsh 333 whatsoever), Tubingen University Library No. 9800.

\textsuperscript{23} For the other sources used by Ibn Şeddâd see A. Sevim, op. cit., pp. 300-301.
on. Al-Karamâni’s work is entitled Kitâb-ı Ahbâr al-Düvel ve Âsrâr al-Ewvel and there is a manuscript of the first volume of it in John Rylands Library (No. 26). Although some of the missing pages have been added to the manuscript by another scribe it may, as Mingana suggests, be contemporary with the author. The work is divided into faśl and bâb. The chapters which concern us are the ones on the Artukids (ff. 241b-243a), and the Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus (ff. 287a-289b). Also the work includes quite good information on the Selçukids, Atabegs, Timur, Danişmendids and Ottomans. The author, as he himself states, had used as his source various historical work such as Târihi Ibn al-Œsir and Târih al-Düvel al-Islâmiyye perhaps the one by Şems al-Din Zahâbi. On folio 440a we are told that the author (d. 1019/1611) had finished the work in 1008/1599.

A manuscript of another work in John Rylands Library, which may concern our field of study is on the history of Timur by Ibn ‘Arabshâh (d. 854/1450) whose full name is Ebu al-‘Abbâs Ahmed b. Muḥammed b. ‘Abdullâh b. ‘Arabshâh Şahâb al-Dîn al-Dîmaşkî al-Hanâfi. The manuscript is the copy of Ibn ‘Arabsâh’s well known work ‘Acâ‘ib al-Makdur fi Nevâ‘îb Timûr in which he thoroughly examines the life and conquets of Timur, the Lame. The folios which concern us here are 24b-28b and 58b-59a which are on Diyarbekr and Mardin. There are quite a lot of 24 This work had been translated into Turkish by Tahir al-Ruhabi, a 12 th/18th century historian. There are two copies of this translation; one in Fatih Library (No. 669) and the other in Suleymaniye Library. -See Istanbul Kitapkhânâ, Tarih-Coğrafya Tazmalar Katalo- günü 1-Türkçe Tazmaları 1. Fasikül, İstanbul 1943, pp. 97-99. In this catalogue it is stated that al-Karamâni’s work is a shorter version of the history of Cenâbi.

25 Mingana (Catalogue of the Arabic Manuscripts in the John Rylands Library at Manches- ter, only includes the manuscripts acquired before 1934. The manuscripts acquired since 1934 are very few and there are hardly any on history. The compilation of these manuscripts have been done by C. E. Bosworth which was published in the Autumn 1974 edition of Ryland Bulletin under the title “A Catalogue of Accession to the Arabic Manuscripts in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester.”

26 A manuscript of Şems al-Din Zahâbi is in Topkapı Sarayi III. Ahmet Küt, No. 2917, For further information on al-Karamani and his work see Mingana, Arabic Manuscripts in the John Rylands Library, pp. 401-403; also see Browne, E. G., A hand list of the Muhammadan Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge, 1900, p. 3.

27 For the life and works of Ibn Arabshah see both EI2 and JA.

28 This work was published in 1285 A. H. in Cairo. It has been translated into Tur- kish, Latin, French and English. For the manuscripts of the Turkish translation see Charles Rieu, Catalogue of the Turkish Manuscripts in the British Museum, 1888, pp. 43-44; Also see Browne, op. cit., pp. 120-121.
works on Timur, but this could be considered as one of the most important since the author was a contemporary of Timur.

Yet another manuscript on the history of area is Tarih al-Mardin by ‘Abd al-Selâm Efendi who was the müfti of Mardin sometime during the first half of the 19th century. The manuscript contains 171 folios and contrary to its title is on the general history of the world rather than on Mardin only. However, it has quite good information on the Artukids, rulers of Mardin, and Timur despite the fact that it was only written during the 19th century, several centuries after the period we are concerned. The folios which would concern us here are roughly from 67 onwards and not yet to the very last folio. It should be added that the work has to be read very critically. There is also another manuscript in Istanbul, by the same author, entitled Umm al-‘Ilber which might be the same work.

Apart from these there are quite a number of manuscripts on the Selçukids, Ayyubids, and Timurids which would be of very use on the area. It would suffice to mention only two of them; one is entitled Şifa’ al-Kulub fi Menâkıbi Beni Eyyüb (Br. Mus. Add. 7311), and the other is Tarih al-Akrad.

Lastly it would be tempting not to mention among the Arabic manuscripts Futûh Diyarbekr ve ardi Rabî’a (Br. Mus. Or. 5663) attributed to al-Vakidi. The work is on the early Muslim conquests of the regions

---

29 I am grateful to Prof. C. E. Bosworth for the microfilm of this manuscript.
30 Universite Ktp. No. 44; Seç N. Goyunç, XVI. Tüzyilda Mardin Sancagi, Istanbul 1969, p. 5.
31 See Cl. Cahen, “L'Histoire du Diyarbekr....”, JA, 243, 1955, p. 162. The author of the manuscript is Cemâl al-Dîn b. Vâsîl since there is a statement in Browne that an anonymous author has quoted from such work (Browne, Muhammadan Manuscripts in Cambridge, p. 358-359.)
32 This manuscript according to G. R. Driver (Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies, II, 1921-1923, pp. 491-511) was acquired by Rich and is supposedly in the British Museum. However, there appears to be no such manuscript listed in “Catalogus Codicum Orientalum Qui in Collection Richiana” and despite all my efforts no such work could be traced in the British Museum.
33 There is another copy of this work in Topkapı Museum Library (A. 2896, See Karatay, TKS Ktp. Arapça Yazmalar Kataloğu, ) under the title, Futuh al-Cezire ve al-Habur ve Diyarbekr min al-Irak.
34 Ellis, Arabic Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., p. 31; On the life and work of al-Vakidi see EI1 and IA.
mentioned. The conquest of Diyarbekr by Ḥālid b. Velid is described very colourfully.

ii) Persian:

Persian manuscripts on the area are very scant. The ones which exist are on the history of the Selçukids, Safavids or Timur, the Lame, or they include sometimes, a chapter or two on the Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus. Some of the manuscripts on Timur and the Selçukids were translated into Arabic or Turkish by the order of various sultans.

One of the oldest works written on the history of Timur is Zafername of Niẓām al-Dīn Ṣāmī. The manuscript of this work in the British Museum (Add. 23980) comprises 215 folios and was copied in 838/1434. What concerns us in this manuscript is the account of Timur’s visit to Mardin (f. 176a), and the Sultan of Mardin asking Timur’s pardon (f. 195b).

Yet there is another work bearing the same title, Zafername, but written by a different author, Mevlanā Şeref al-Dīn Āli Yezi. There are sixteen manuscripts of this work in the British Museum.

Another important manuscript on the history of Timur is entitled Malfüżāt-i Emīr Timūr; the work was originally written in Mongolian and was translated into Persian by Ebū Tālib al-Huseynī in 1202/1787. This manuscript which comprises 413 folios is in the British Museum (Or. 158). There is also an amendment of this work by Muhammed Afdal Buḥārī under the title Melfūzāt-i Sāhib Kārān (Br. Mus. Add. 16686) of which there are altogether seven manuscripts in the British Museum.

---

35 Published by F. Tauer, Praha, 1937; Turkish translation by N. Lugal, Ankara 1949.
37 On the life of Şeref al-Dīn see IA.
38 Rieu, Persian Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 173-177; Add. 25024 comprises 758 folios. For the copies in Cambridge see Browne, A Catalogue of the Persian Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge, 1896, p. 117; Also see C. A. Storey, Persian Literature, 1/1, pp. 284-289.
39 Rieu, Persian Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 177-180; Al-Azzawi, op. cit., vol. 2, pp. 12-14. Note that the work was translated from Persian into French and from French into Turkish.
40 Rieu, Persian Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., p. 186; Another copy see Browne, Muhammadan Manuscripts in Cambridge, p. 219.
Perhaps one of the most valuable manuscripts on the history of Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus is the work of Idris b. Husam al-Din al-Bidlisi. This work which is entitled Heşit Behişt mainly deals with the conquests of the first eight Ottoman sultans. There are two copies of Heşit Behişt in the British Museum (Add. 7646 and Add. 7647) and they comprise 293 and 245 folios respectively. They both are dated 988/1580.

Lubb al-Lubab (Br. Mus. Or. 3400) which is on the general Muslim history has also some information on the Akkoyunlus (ff. 84b-90b). The work written by Haci Muhammed Kuli Kacak was completed, as understood from folio 96b, in 1097/1685 and the Or. 3400 was copied in the 19th century.

Yet another work on the universal history is Zubdet al-Tawarih (Br. Mus. Or. 3498) by Muhammed Muhsin, Mustavfi of Nadir Shah. This work written in 1154/1741 (f. 215b) has valuable information on the Akkoyunlus and Safavids (f. 140a onwards). The present manuscript was copied in the 19th century. There is another work also bearing the title Zubdet al-Tawarih written by a well known author called Hafiz Ebru whose full name is Siha al-Din ‘Abdullah b. Lu‘fullah b. ‘Abd al-Reşid al-Medd’uv b. Hafiz-i Ebru (d. 833/1430). There is a copy of Ebru’s Zubdet al-Tawarih in Istanbul. Hafiz-i Ebru’s better known work is entitled Mecmâ al-Tavarih which he began writing in 820/1417 and presented it to Shah Ruh in 823/1420. Hafiz-i Ebru, to this latter work, had also written an addendum entitled Zeyl-i Cami al-Tevafi-i Râsûl which is almost a repetition of Zubdet al-Tavarih. Hafiz-i Ebru’s Zubdet al-Tavarih, therefore, is one of the most valuable works which has given original information on the history of Timur and the Akkoyunlus. In fact, on the history of Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus, both of his works should be consulted.

41 On the life and works of Bidlisi see El2.
42 There is another work bearing this title, written by Ibn Mubarek al-Kazvini, is on the lives of the poets in the court of Akkoyunlus; The manuscript of this work is in Fatih Library (no. 4534) at Istanbul. See I. H. Uzunçarşılı, Anadolu Beylikleri, p. 196.
43 Rieu, Persian Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 216-217; Another copy is in John Rylands Library (No. 395-6) in two volumes: see Bibliotheca Lindesiana, Hand List of Oriental manuscripts, Arabic, Persian, Turkish, Privately printed, 1898, p. 155.
46 On the life and work Hafizi Ebru see both El1 and IA.
47 Fatih Library, Istanbul (No. 4371); see Sümer, Kara Köyünlular, p. 145.
48 Sümer, Kara Köyünlular, p. 34.
Some information on the history of the Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus can also be found in another British Museum manuscript (Or. 3333, ff. 114a-119b).49

One of the unique manuscripts in the British Museum is Or. 3248 on the history of Şâh Ismâ‘îl under whose domain Diyarbekr remained from 913/1513 to 921/1515.50 This manuscript bears no title or author’s name. A copy of the same work in Cambridge (Add. 200) however, appears to be entitled Tarih-i Şâh Ismâ‘îl.51 The period which concerns us is covered between the folios 122a-262a. In fact folios 122a-142a are entirely on Diyarbekr region. The manuscript was copied in the 16th century and the work originally was written under Şâh Tahmasp I (930-984/1524-1576).

Another work without title and author’s name is Or. 4508 of the British Museum.52 The manuscript which was copied in 1272/1855 is a comprehensive work on the universal history in a single volume. The work perhaps was written under Şâh ʿAbbâs I (996-1629/1588-1629). The folios which particularly concern us are 213b-236b on the Artukids. The work also has information on the Selçukids of Syria between the folios 216b-224a.

There is also some information on the history of the area in Mir‘ât al-Edvâr ve Mirkât al-Âbâr of Muslih al-Din Lâri which was translated into Turkish by Hoca Sa‘eddin.53 The first volume of Tarih-i Mahmûd Şâh Pâdişâh-i Gucurât (Cambridge Add. 407) whose author is unknown has unique information on the Atabegs of Syria and Diyarbekr (ff. 266b-247a).

Apart from historical works there are also geographical works written, in Persian, which include some geographical and topographical information relevant to the study of the region. One of these works is Nuzhat al-Âkülûb (Br. Mus. Add. 16736)54 of Ḥamdullâh b. Ebi Bekr b. Ḥamd-Mustavfi al-Kazvini (680-751/1281-1350). The work was compiled in 740/1339. The folios which concern us are on Diyârîbekr and Diyâr-ı Rabî’a (ff. 169b-171a).

Riyâd al-Seyahât (Br. Mus. Or. 4617) of Ibn Iskender Ziyâ al'Abidin Şirvâni Ni‘metullahi could not be considered as important as the preceding work since the present volume which consists the second volume of the work, was completed in 1242/1826. Diyârîbekr region is described between the folios 111b-114b.

iii) Turkish:

The manuscripts in Turkish relating to the region are not only few, but the ones which exist, with the exception of the official letters, are of secondary importance. Some of these manuscripts are the translations of the works in Arabic and Persian, and some others have derived their information from the works in these two languages. They, however, cannot wholly be ignored for some of these sources used in them are lost.

One of the most important of the works in Turkish is no doubt the translation of Şerefname by Muhammed Beg b. Ahmed Beg Mirza. There are two copies of the work in the British Museum. The work which is originally in Persian was written by Emir Şerf b. Şems al-Dîn Bidlisi in 1005/1596. It is mainly on the history of Diyârîbekr province. On the folio 8a of the Or. 1127, the translator states that he has written this version by the order of Emir Şerf Hân, son of the late 'Abd al-Hân in 1078/1667.

There is also another translation of Şerefname by Şemî which is of more importance than the preceding one. The manuscript of this work which is also in the British Museum (Add. 18547) only comprises 184 folios, half of the Or. 1127, but possesses two suplements carrying the local history for about another century that is right to the end of the 17th century. Şemî wrote this work in 1095/1684 at the instigation of his patrons, Mustafa Beg of Egil and Muhammed Kucur Beg of Palu.

55 G. Le Strange has edited it in 1915 (published in E. J. W. Gibb Memorial series, vol. xxiii) and translated into English in 1919.
57 Or. 1127 and Add. 7860; See Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 70-71.
59 Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 71-72; Another copy is in Topkapı Palace Museum Library (r. 1459), see F. E. Karatay, Topkapı Sarayı Müzesi Kütüphanesi, Türkçe Yazmalar Kataloğu, vol. 1, Istanbul 1961, p. 244.
On the history of Timur the most important translation is that of Ibn ‘Arabšâh’s Acâ’ib al-Makdûr fi Nervâ’ Ibîm Timûr by Murtaza Nazmi Zâde. The manuscript of this translation in the British Museum (Add. 7847) comprises 170 folios. Nazmi Zâde started his translation in 1109/1697 and completed it on 2nd Rabî‘ al-‘Awal 1110/1698. In the preface he sketches out the life of Ibn ‘Arabšâh. Between folios 3b-117a the subsequent events down to the date of composition in 840/1436 are presented. There is also a shorter version of the same translation entitled Târîh-i Timûr Gûrkanî li-Nazmi Zâde Efendi (Br. Mus. Add. 11524).

On the history of the Selçukids one of the rare manuscripts is Târîh-i Âli Selçuk by Yazıcı Zâde ‘Ali Efendi. There are three manuscripts of this work in the Library of Topkapı Sarayi Museum (Nos. R 1390-2). The work was written by the order of Muhammed II (834-855/1421-1451). What concerns us mainly in this work is the second chapter, which is on the Great Selçukids, covering the period from the reign of Rukn al-Din Ebu Talib Tuğrul Beg to the reign of Mu’iz al-Din Ebu Haris Sultan Sencer including the Selçukids of Irak. The first chapter, which according to Blochet taken from Reşid al-Din’s Câmi‘ al-Tavârîh, is on the old Turkish clans, and the family lineage, arma and tamgâs of Oğuz tribes. Chapters three and four are on the Ottomans. Especially in chapter four there is a good account of the fall of the beyliks and the rise of the Ottoman Empire on their soil. It is argued that the third chapter is the exact translation of Ibn-i Bibi’s Al-Evâmir al-Alaiyye fi’l-Umur al-Âliyye while the fourth chapter is a translation of what Reşid al-Din has narrated.

Perhaps one of the unique Turkish manuscripts in John Rylands Library (No. 74) is a translation of the Târîh-i Mustâh al-Din-i Lârî by Hoca Sa’d al-Din in about 1061/1650. Throughout the manuscript (in John Rylands) there are quite a lot of verses occurring in Persian. The work, being a universal history begins with the fall of Adem, giving an account of other prophets including Jesus and Muhammed (fl. 1a-59a), and ends... up with a short account of learned men and viziers (ff. 458a-464b), thus covering many historical events up to the year 974/1566. It has quite good information on local rulers of South East Anatolia (ff. 287b-289a), Great Selçukids (ff. 289a-306b), Ayyubids (ff. 309a-370a), Timur and his sons and the account of the cities which he destroyed including his war with Bâyezid (ff. 401b-440a), and the Akko-yunlus (ff. 449b-458b). It appears that the chapter on Timur is an abridged translation from Ibn ʿArabī’s work.

Muslih al-Din-i Lâri (d. 980/1572) was a mudarris in the Husrev Paşa medrese in the city of Diyarbakır. There is also another medrese in Diyarbakır which is called by his name and in which he also taught. His tombstone still stands in the courtyard of this so called Muslih al-Din-i Lâri medrese which is a ruin today.

On the Ottoman period one of the best manuscripts is the Maasir Selmî Hâni by Mustafa b. Celâl, a copy of which is in the British Museum (Add. 7848). The work which comprises 494 folios is on the history of the reign of Sultan Selim I. The author first was one of the writers of Divân under Selim I, but later Süleyman II raised him to the post of Re’is al-Kuttâb in 930/1523 and then to the writership of Tuğra (Nişâncı) after the conquest of Bağdad in 941/1534. At the age of seventy, when resigned from this post, he started writing the history of Sultan Süleyman II’s reign which he has entitled Tabakâl al-Memâlik ve Derecâl al-Mesâlik and the manuscript of which is also in the British Museum (Add. 7855).

While writing this work he was at the same time becoming aware of the true account of Selim’s reign and thus started writing the history of it. Both these works are no doubt very valuable. But we are mostly concerned with the Maasir Selim Hâni, the chapter XVII of which is on the conquest of Diyarbekr and the environs.

iv) Collection of Royal Letters:

Unfortunately there are hardly any royal letters of the middle ages that have survived in their original form; some of them have been rewrit-

69 Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. mus., pp. 72-73.
70 Ibid pp. 49-50.
ten and compiled by the orders of Ottoman sultans. Among these compilations the most important one relevant to us is Munse‘at-i salatîn compiled by well known Feridun Beg, a manuscript copy of which is in the British Museum (Or. 61). This manuscript comprises the letters of Muhammed II, and Bayezid II to the contemporary princes and the replies from them between the years 848-913/1444-1507. The letters are in Turkish, Arabic and Persian. The present manuscript was copied in the 17th century. The folios which concern us are 26b-81b; 96b-133a and 148b-161a. Between these folios there are letters by Muhammed II to the Akkoyunlu rulers and replies from them.

The second collection of Royal letters which is of most importance to us is Add. 7688 of British Museum. This manuscript in Rieu, Turkish manuscripts in the Br. Mus. and Rieu, Persian manuscripts in the Br. Mus. is wrongly entitled as Majma‘ al-Insha which in fact is the title of the Or. 3482 of he British Museum. As it would appear on folio 1a the correct title of the work should be Kitâb-ı Mecmu‘î al-Murâselât. The manuscript comprises the letters of the Şâh of Persia to their contemporary princes and answers from them. The work also includes other state papers. The compiler of the work Ebu al-Kasım Ivağlı Haydar has collected and arranged the letters in a chronological order, from the reign of the Selçukid Alp Arslan to that of Safawid Safi I. The compiler was in charge of the court Harim at Isfehan at the death of the Safawid ʿAbbas I (1038/1629). The letters are in Persian and Turkish, and the ones which are relevant to us are between the folios 57a-82b. Amongst them the most important ones are the following: the letters of Uzun Hasan to Muhammed II announcing Cihâl Şâh’s defeat in 872; Muhammed II to Uzun Hasan warning him; Muhammed II to his son Mustafa conveying the news of 72 Feridun, Munse‘at-i Salâtîn, vol. 1, Istanbul 1274. Feridun Beg who was the private secretary of Sokullu Mehmed Paşa was appointed as Re‘isul-kültüb in 1570 and then as nişâncı in 1573. When he presented his Munse‘at to Murad III in 1575 he hardly received any thanks and was dismissed from his post Nişancı in 1576 for being a protege of Sokullu. However, he was recalled back to the office of Nişancı in 1581 and died two years later on the 16th of March. See V. L. Menage, “Feridun Beg” in EI2; cf. Haci Hâlide, vol. V, p. 488—see under the title.

---

73 For the full context of the work see Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 80-83.

74 See the next manuscript; The title “Maizan al-Akhlaq” on the back of binding is also wrong.

75 Same as the one in Or. 61, fol. 68b.
the defeat of Uzun Hasan at Tercan in 878; Selim I to 'Ubayd Han Özbek conveying the news of the conquests in Diyarbekr province in 921.\(^76\)

Or. 348 of the British Museum also compiled by Ebu al-Kasım Ivağılı is another collection of the Royal letters relevant to our field of study. It mainly comprises the correspondences of Safawid Şah İsmâ'îl I\(^77\), Timur, and Safawid Şah İsmâ'îl II. Between the folios 198b-203a there is a letter of Nasuh Paşa who was wâli of Diyarbekr (1015-1020/1606-1611)\(^78\).

No doubt the manuscripts on the dynasties which ruled in Diyarbekr region are much more and each one of them would have valuable information which would throw light on the history of the area especially with regard to the relations with the neighbouring states. Also there are other manuscript copies of some of the manuscripts mentioned in this article. It is impossible, however, to cite all these manuscripts let alone to examine them within the frame work of a short essay. They can easily be traced in the catalogues of manuscripts of the libraries and museums.

II - INSCRIPTIONS, COINS AND SEALS:

There are quite a lot of inscriptions on the city walls, mosques, public and private buildings, and tombstones in Diyarbekr region which have survived to our time. Although most of these inscriptions have been recorded there are still some, especially on the tombstone and walls of the private houses, that have not been noticed. The tombstones in the Diyarbakır Museum and the other museums in the region, and those lying in the cemeteries, if studied, could bring to light many unknown facts about the history of the region. Likewise there are quite a lot of coins lying in the museums of Turkey, Europe and Middle East which are not yet catalogued let alone examined or studied. These coins, in fact, would require a special study in order to throw further light on the history of the region.

No work has been done on the seals of the area at all. There are quite a number of seals stamped on the folios of the manuscripts in the Diyarbakır Library. Also the seals existing in the museums must be recorded and studied as soon as possible. Unless these works have been accomplished the facts about the history of the area will remain obscure and incomplete.

\(^76\) For the full context of the work see Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., pp. 83-86.

\(^77\) On the letters of Şah İsmâ'îl I also see Add. 7654 of Br. Mus. -Rieu, Turkish Manuscripts in the Br. Mus., p. 87.

\(^78\) Ibid pp. 86-87.

III - EDITED AND PUBLISHED WORKS:

These are mainly the works of well known historians of the middle ages who wrote the history of the world upto their own era in massive volumes, and the works of not so well known historians who wrote local and individual histories. No doubt that the works of the latter may sometimes be more reliable than the works of former.

One of the best known historians is Ibn al-Esir, the author of the universal history entitled Al-Kāmil fi al-Tāriḥ. ʿIzz al-Dīn Ebu al-Ḥasan ʿAli b. Muḥammed Ibn al-Esir was born in al-Čezire in 555/1160 and died in Mosul in 630/1232⁷⁹. He finished his work in 619/1222 and the events he had covered in it are up to the arrival of Čelāl al-Dīn Ḥāva rezmşāh⁸⁰. In this work Ibn al-Esir gives valuable information on the origin of the Selçukids, foundation of their state and its expansion. He also gives quite good account of the events occurred in Diyarbekr region during the 11th and 12th centuries. Al-Kāmil fi al-Tāriḥ was first edited in 1851-76 by C.J. Tornberg under the title Ibn al-Athiri Chronicon in 14 volumes (Leyden/Upsala) and was republished in 12 volumes in Beirut⁸¹. Ibn al-Esir, despite having relied on many sources without having cited them, was one of the most able historians of the Middle Ages. His work is very valuable and original even for the period before his life time.

Camiʿ al-Tavārīḥ, a universal history by Reṣīd al-Dīn⁸², was written in Persian. ʿAḍālullāh b. ʿImād al-Dīvle Ebu al-Ḥayr b. ʿAli was a Jew from Hamadan and had served under the Ilhanids. He rose to the post of vizier under Muḥammed Ḥudābend Olcaytu but was killed when Olcaytu died in 1317 A.D. His work is largely based on the other sources and the ⁷⁹ On the life and works of Ibn al-Esir see EI2 and IA.

⁸⁰ Kouynijjan, A Numismatic History..., p. 25. However, according to F. Sümer and A. Sevim (Islam Kaynaklarına gore Malazgirt Savaşı, p. 23) it covers the period upto 1231.
⁸¹ Vols. X-XII of Beirut edition covers our period.
⁸² On the life and work of Reṣīd al-Dīn see IA.
Selçukid section is entirely based on a lost work of Zāhir al-Din Nişaburi on the history of the Selçukids, or Revândî's Râhat al-Sudûr.

Hamdullah al-Mustavfî al-Kazvini's work Târîkh-i Gûzide has a good section on the Great Selçukids.

Another work of importance on the history of the Great Selçukids is Aḥbâr al-Devle al-Selçukiyye whose author is unknown. It is based on three different sources on the Selçukids. The first two sources which comprise the first two sections of the work are ʿImâd al-Dîn's Zubdetu al-Tawârîkh and Nusretu al-Fitrê. The title and the author of the third source is unknown. The work on the whole includes the narratives of the Great Selçukids from their origin up to the death of Rûkn al-Dîn Tûrûl in 590/1194.

A work on the Selçukids of Rûm without the name of the author is Tanvî-i Ali Selçuk (der Anatuli). This work has been translated into Turkish by Uzluk and published together with its facsimiles. This work just like the preceding one gives the events from the origin of the Selçukids until the year 765/1363. However, the events mentioned between the years 694-765 are very few, extremely short and are nothing more than the dates of the death of some sultans and important personalities. Uzluk had done a straight translation from the only manuscript which is in Paris and has not bothered to edit the text. In the Turkish text there are many mistakes made in the transliteration of the personal names and even many of them are misread.

Ibn al-Cevzi's Kitâb al-Muntazam ve Multekât al-Mutezem fi Aḥbâr al-Muluk ve al-Umam although does not have much on the area but is important for its originality especially for the early period of the Selçukids. The work is a general history covering the events up to the year 573/1177. Cemâl al-Dîn Ebû al-Ferec ʿAbd al-Rahmân b. ʿAli b. Muhammed Ibn

---

83 This section is edited by A. Ateş Ẓîk-r-i Târîh-i Āli Selçuk, Ankara 1960.
84 Sümer and Sevim, op. cit., p. 60.
86 On the life of Hamdullah al-Mustavfî see EJ2 and IA.
87 Edited by Abd al-Husayn Nawai, Tehran.
88 Edited by M. Ikbal (Lahore 1933); translated into Turkish by N. Lugal, Ankara 1943.
al-Cevzi was born in Baghdad in 562/1116 and died in 597/1200. His work was published in Haydarabad in 1358/1939.

Sibt Ibn al-Cevzi’s work is no doubt much more important than that of Ibn al-Cevzi. Sibt Ibn al-Cevzi, whose real name is Şems al-din Ebû al-Mużaffer Yusuf b. Kuzüglü b. ʿAbdullah was born in Baghdad in 582/1186 and died in Damascus in 655/1257. As it would be understood from his nickname he was grandson of Ibn al-Cevzi whom we mentioned above. It appears that his grandfather was his first teacher. His work Mi-rât al-Zamân fi Târîh al-ʿAyân is a universal history comprising the events from the creation of Adam until the author’s death. The account of the events which occurred during his lifetime are no doubt original. For the earlier periods he has used various sources which have not survived to our time. He has made use of the works of Ibn al-Kalânisî, Ibn al-Cevzi, Ibn al-Azrak and some others. Although some parts of his work are edited and published by various scholars but the most of it still lies in manuscripts in various libraries. Fortunately, however, the sections on the Selçukids which concern us are edited and published by Sevim. In this work the conquest of Diyarbekr by the Selçukids is told in detail. Furthermore it gives quite good account of the Artukid family serving under the Selçukid sultans.

Mirhond’s Ravdatu al-Sعâ which also is a universal history has some information relevant to the area of our study. Mirhond b. Ḥavendşâh b. Mahmud was born in 837/1433 and died in 904/1498. His work in eight volumes, is entitled Ravdat al-Ṣâḥâ fi Sîret al-Enbiyā ve al-Mulûk ve al-Ḥulefâ and was written in Persian. It has quite good information on the Selçukids, Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus. On the history of Karakoyunlus he has used, as his source, ʿAbd al-Rezzak Kemâl al-Dîn b. Ishâq-i Semerkandî’s Matlaʾ al-Sâdeyn Mecâr al-Bahreyn. The most important work yet to be mentioned is Ebu Bekr-i Tihrâni’s Kitâb-i Dîyârbeكريyye, which is entirely on the history of the Akkoyun-

91 On the life and work of Ibn al-Cevzi see El2 and I A.
92 Kouynjian (op. cit., p. 27) has fallen into a mistake by saying “son in law...”
93 Awad, Tarih al-Farq.
95 On the life and work of Mirhond see IA.
96 F. Sumer, Kara Köyunlular, p. 4.
lus and Karakoyunlus and has most original information on the region of Diyarbekr that could be found in no other work. The work has been edited with foot-notes in Turkish by Sümer and Lugal from an only existing manuscript in the private library of Muhammed Emin, a solicitor in Basra. Introduction to the first volume by Sümer includes a short biography of the author, an account of the sources of the work itself as a source to Gaffari, Hasan Beg Rumlu and Müneccim Başiş.

IV - EPIGRAPHY:

The first book published in the West on the epigraphy of the area was in 1910 under the title Amida. This book, written in three languages, comprises the works of three different authors in one volume. Apart from Miss Bell the other authors have not been to Amid. The first part written in French by Swiss scholar Berchem, is on the inscriptions. Berchem studied the inscriptions from the photographs by a French general L. de Beylie who had visited Amid in 1907. The inscriptions of the Abbasids, Mervanids, Selçukids, Inalids, Artukids of Hisn-i keyfa, Ayyubids, Artukids of Mardin, and Ottomans have been transcribed and translated into French together with a very short historical background. Berchem has also examined some reliefs of the Selçukids on the walls of the city and the Grand Mosque and compared them and the inscriptions with those in Bağdad and Aleppo. Unfortunately, only a portion of the inscriptions on the walls of the city and the Grand Mosque are recorded and even these are incomplete; some of the terms are misread and a lot is left out from each inscription. Although there are quite a number of the inscriptions of the Ottoman period two of them are only recorded. Beside not recording 97 N. Lugal and F. Sumer, Kitab-ı Diyârbekriyye, Ak-Koyunular Tarihi, Ankara 1962-1964, 2 vols.; however, there is another copy of this work in M. H. Yımanç’s private library, see art. “Diyarbekir” in IA.

98 Nusahi Cihan Ara; Gaffari (d. 975/1567) has also made use of Yahya b. ʿAbd al-Latif Kaẓvini’s Lubb al-Tawarīḥ.
99 Ahsen al-Tawarīḥ.
100 Saha'if al-Ahbar; On the life and work of Müneccim Başiş see IA and also N. Atsiz, Müneccimbaşı Şeyh Ahmed Efendi, hayats ve eserleri, Istanbul 1939.
101 Max van Berchem and Joseph Strzgowski, Amida, Heidelberg 1910.
102 See the introduction p. 4; L. de Beylie published his travels after his return from al-Cezaire: Prome et Samarra, voyage archéologique en Birmanie et en Mesopotamie, par le General L. de Beylie, Paris, E. Leroux éditeur, 1907.
any inscriptions of the Akkoyunlus the author has concluded that there are none belonging to them.

The second part of the book is on the art and architecture of Diyarbekr, Syria and Egypte written in German by Austrian Strzygowski. Joseph Strzygowski has examined and studied Muslim and Christian arts and architecture in these areas and has sometimes compared them. He has also transcribed and examined some of the inscriptions in Latin, Greek and Syriac.

The third part of the book, as it is apparent from its title, is on the churches and monasteries of Tur Abidin, to the east of Mardin. This part is written by an English traveller Gertrude Lowthian Bell in which she gives the location and the description of the churches and monasteries.

Throughout the book there are photographs and plans of the mosques, churches and other buildings of the areas in question beside fifty six photographs at the end which are entirely of Amid.

Gabriel’s Voyages Archeologique also includes the inscription of Diyarbekr region. This work is in two volumes, the second volume only includes the photographs. The first volume is in five chapters: the first chapter is on the histiography, topography and the monuments of Mardin, Dunaysir and Hisn-i Keyfa; the second on Diyarbekr; the third on Mayyafariqin, Bitlis and Ahlat; the forth on Kharput, Malatya and Urfa; the fifth and the last chapter is on the inscriptions of Mardin, Dunaysir, Hisn-i Keyfa, Diyarbekir, Meyyafariqin, Port du Batman Su, Bitlis, Akhlat, Kharput, Pertek, Malatya and Urfa. In this final chapter the inscriptions have been transcribed and translated into French. However, just like in Amida, only a fragment of the inscriptions have been recorded and some terms have been misread.

Some of the inscriptions in Berchem’s Amida have been studied by two scholars: Flury has only concentrated on Kufic inscriptions and has made their evaluation by comparing them with other Islamic inscriptions in an

---

103 Halil Edhem has made the same error: H. Edhem, “Bibliyografiya, Amida” in Tarih-i Osmâni Encümeni Mecmuası, 6, 1329, p. 375.

104 Institut Francais d’Archeologie de Stamboul, Voyages Archeologiques dans la Turquie Orientale par Albert Gabriel-Paris, E. de Bocard, 1940.
article published in three parts in the periodical Syria. In this article Flury has also given an alphabet of the Kufic inscriptions.

Wiet has studied the inscriptions of Saladin which were published in Berchem’s Inscriptions Arabes de Syrie and his Amida.

The inscriptions of Diyarbekr region can also be found together with their French translations in Reportoire Chronologique and Syrie du Nord. In both of these works the inscriptions have been copied from the works already published. In the last work, on page 115, the titles of the rulers have been written in their Arabic forms as they would appear in the inscriptions.

Some work on the inscriptions of Diyarbekr has also been done by the local scholars such as Konyar, Baykal, Savci and Beysanoğlu. Of these the most important is the combined work of Baykal and Savci entitled Diyarbakır Anıtları ve Tarihi. This work, unfortunately, was never published and perhaps is lost except that some fragments of it have been typed by someone and kept in the Diyarbakır Museum. These fragments comprise only a part of the original work and many errors have been made by the typist. Furthermore since the inscriptions have been transliterated into Latin letters without any systematic pattern it is difficult to decide how the special terms were written in their original script. According to Baykal, however, the system adopted in the original work was as follows: Origin of the name of the town, the description of the walls and towers and their constructors and builders. Also each monument was written on a single form, altogether amounting to ninety-five forms or for that matter folios (on the monuments).

---

110 Kazım Baykal and Suleyman Savcı have written various articles on the inscriptions published in the local periodical Karacadağ. A summarised extracts of these article can be found in a handbook written by the same authors, Diyarbakır Şehri, ‘Broşür’, Diyarbakır Matbaası, 1942.

The inscriptions of the various towns in the region can also be found in the works of the above mentioned authors and some other local scholars. But they are all, with the exception of Ibn Muhammed’s Meyyafarikin 112 written in Ottoman script, have drawback of an unsystematic transliteration and comprising only a fragment of the inscriptions existing in the area.

Ibn Muhammed’s work and Savcı’s Silvan Tarihi 113 include quite a lot of inscriptions of Meyyafarikin with a short historical background to the dynasties ruled in the town.

The inscriptions included in Şerif’s work 114 are also of some use for studying the history of the area.

V - NUMISMATICS:

The coins of the dynasties who ruled in the area can be found in the numismatic catalogues of the museums of many countries in Europe and Asia. It appears from these catalogues that every dynasty that ruled in the area struck coins. The main minting places, as far as known, were Amid, Meyyafarikin, Hisn-ı Keyfa, Mardin, and Maden.

Lane-Poole’s Catalogue of Arabic Coins at Cairo\(^{115}\) has some coins of the Ayyubids (only the ones struck at Harran), Hamdanids, Marwanids, Selçukids, Artukids and Zangids of al-Cezire. It becomes apparent from this catalogue that there were two other minting places; Nasibin for Hamdanids and al-Cezire for Zangids.

There are also the Catalogues of the Islamic Coins compiled by Edhem. In one of his catalogues the coins of Selim I struck at Amid and Mardin, and of Suleyman II struck at Amid, Hisn-i Keyfa, Harput and Mardin are mentioned\(^{116}\).

All of these catalogues, however, are out of date and unfortunately very few catalogues have recently been published. One of these is I. and C. Artuk’s İslami Sikkeler Kataloğu\(^{117}\). The first volume of this work includes quite a number of coins of Umayyads, ‘Abbasids, Ayyubids, Hamdanids, Marwanids, Selçukids, Artukids, Zangids, İnalids, and Nisanids (Beysanids) struck in Diyarbekr region.

I. Artuk’s Kanuni Sikkeleri\(^{118}\) also includes quite a lot of coins of Suleyman II struck at Amid, Cezire, Hisn-i Keyfa, and Mardin.

An article by Artuk on the coins of the Artukids has also been published in a periodical printed in Diyarbakır\(^{119}\). Unfortunately this article also has a drawback of an unsystematic transliteration.

In none of the above mentioned catalogues we come across the coins of the Akkoyunlus who ruled in Diyarbekr for more than a century. Baykal\(^{120}\), however, points out twenty silver coins bearing the the names of the Akkoyunlu rulers of Diyarbekr.

---

\(^{115}\) S. Lane-Poole, Catalogue of the Collection of Arabic Coins preserved in the Khedivial Library at Cairo, London 1897.

VI - BOOKS:

Apart from Berchem and Gabriel's works, mentioned above, there are hardly any books published on the history of the area in European languages. There are only few books on the general history of Turkey that give some information on the region of Diyarbekr. Cl. Cahen's Pre Ottoman Turkey (London 1968) has no more information than those included in his articles. Setton's¹²¹ and Runciman's¹²² histories of the Crusades are too much specialised to give any information on Diyarbekr. Vryonis in only few pages of his work mentions the region.

S. Lane-Poole has included the geneologies of the dynasties ruled in Diyarbekr in his Muhammadan Dynasties (London 1893) but has almost given no information on them. The Turkish edition of Lane-Poole by Edhem¹²³ has a fuller account of the dynasties in question and a more detailed geneology. There is also some information on the dynasties together with their geneological list in C. E. Bosworth's *The Islamic Dynasties*¹²⁴.

Some information can also be found in the narratives of the European travellers. One of these is Badger's *The Nestorians and their Rituals*¹²⁵ in two volumes. The first volume of this work is almost entirely on Diyarbekr region. The author narrates his journey from Harput to Mosul and back to Diyarbekr again. The author has also recorded some Latin inscriptions. Especially it is very interesting to note that he has transcribed and translated the inscriptions on the tombstone of Gregory bar Hebraeus in Beit Kaddeshe a distance of four hours on foot from Mosul. According to this inscription bar Hebraeus died on 30th August 1597 Grecian era (1225 A.D.) and probably was born in 1536.

¹²⁴ C. E. Bosworth, The Islamic Dynasties (a chronological and genealogical handbook), Edinburgh 1967; this work is translated into Turkish by E. Mercil and M. Ipşirli, İslam Devletleri Tarihi (Kronoloji ve Soykülügü Elkitabı), Istanbul 1980.

The work on the whole, is mostly concerned with the Christian churches, villages and population. Now and then some discussion is put forward about the local inhabitants and few chapters entirely assigned to the Yazeeedees. In the work there is quite good account of the description of the churches, towns, villages, ruins, local habits and traditions and of the distribution of population.

However the best travelling account of the region is done by Evliya Çelebi in his Seyahatname. In this work Evliya Çelebi gives information on Harran, Çermik, Çungüs and Harput. He has also copied in this work the Kânunnâme of Süleyman -as applied- in Diyarbekr region and its san-caks under the Ottoman rule, Hisn-i Keyfa, Cizre and Nusaybin. Also throughout the work he describes the dialects of the towns and compares with his own.

The books in Turkish on the region are mainly by the local historians. The most valuable of these are in the Ottoman script and the ones in Latin script with the exception of Savcî’s works revolve around them with little contribution.

The 8th volume of Said Paşa’s Universal history is almost entirely on Diyarbekr region. This volume, confined to Mesopotimia, has two hundred pages of information on the history of Diyarbekr region. Said Paşa first deals with the geography of the area and then proceeds on to giving a historical account of the dynasties ruled in Diyarbekr. The dynasties in question are: Ali al-Şeyh, Mervanids, Ali Yinal (پنال), Artukids of Amid and Mardin, and Ayyubids. He also writes about the history of Diyarbekr at the time of Hulagu. Finally he examines history of Mardin under the Ilgaziyye branch of the Artukids.

Ali Emiri’s work is not as much thorough as that of Said Paşa’s. After an introduction to the book Ali Emiri examines the population, bu-

---

126 Ibid p. 97.
127 The information given here is derived from the manuscript which is in John Rylands Library (No. 142).
129 Ali emiri, Osmanlı Vilâyet-ı Şarkiyeti, Diyarbekir Vilâyeti, Istanbul 1337/1918, Evkaf-ı İslamiye Matbaası. On the author’s life see the introduction of the work.
ildings, ruins and the mosques of the city. He then sketches out a short history of the province of Diyarbekr from very early times up to its conquest by the Ottomans during the reign of Selim I, after which he lays down a fairly detailed history of Diyarbekr under the Ottoman rule. Ali Emiri, himself from Diyarbakir, has made a lot of contribution to the culture of the area. One of the books edited and published by him has a great deal of information on the history of the Artukids of Mardin.

Artuk's work also is on the Artukids of Mardin. In this work it is interesting to note that there is much stress put on the relations between the Artukids and the Fatimids and their fight against the Crusades. The work also includes a genealogical table of the Artukids, and reproduction of some coins and inscriptions.

The sâlnâmes of Diyarbekr, written in Ottoman script, have no doubt a lot of information on the province. One of these yearbooks, published in 1302, includes Said Paşa's Diyarbekir Tarihi. In the "zeyl" of the 1319 yearbook there is a short geographical and historical background to the region including an account of its buildings such as mosques, and its educational institutions.

The works in Latin script by the local historians do not much differ from one another. Günkut's work in a single volume is mainly on the geography and history of the city of Diyarbakir. It also gives some historical background to the other towns in the region. Konyar's work in three volumes is on the history (vol. 1) and the inscriptions (vol. 2) of the city; the third volume is a yearbook. In the second volume the author has criticised Berchem's Amida. Beysanoglu's works are well presented. Te-kin's colourful work is nothing more than a touristic handbook. Sözen's work is on the architecture of Diyarbakır city and therefore include a lot of information in this respect. It gives very short historical background to the monuments; their founders, architects and builders. The author has also drawn plan of each monument. He has briefly discussed and even drawn the original plans of the mosques, madreses and some houses.

---

There is also a historical background to the Mardin province, in Diyarbekr region, in the introduction of Göyünç's work. In the first chapter Göyünç gives the history of the conquest of Diyarbekr province including Mardin by the Ottomans. The rest of the work is the study of the sancak of Mardin during the sixteenth century based on the archival sources in the Başbakanlık Archive and Topkapı Palace Archive. The work also includes a good bibliography and a map of Mardin region.

The chapters on the Akkoyunlus and Karakoyunlus in Uzunçarşılı's Anadolu Beylikleri are excellent piece of scholarly work but lack a good presentation and sufficient sources.

Eröz's work is too short (20 pages altogether) to present anything valuable on the area.

The works of Yınanç, Turan, and Sümer have some information on the events that occurred in the region during the middle ages. There is also a very good bibliography in the works of the latter two.

We also find some information on Diyarbekr in two scholarly works published by Prof. Yaşar Yücel:

---

141 M. H. Yınanç, Türkiye Tarıhi, Selçuklu Deviri, 1. Anadolu'nun Fetlisi; Istanbul 1944.
145 Belleten C. LIII, 15
VII - ARTICLES:

Since the dynasties that ruled in Diyarbekr region have never been treated in a single article, the classification will be made by dynasties with an account of articles on ethnography and etymology before and the rest after.

A - Ethnic Origin of the Turkish and Etymology;

The existing literature of this type is ample; the articles are only part of it. Spread of Turkish language, the etymology of the words “Turks” and “Turan” -as presented in Şahname-, the meaning of Turan and whether Hephthalites or Halac are Turks or not is well put forward by Frye and Sayılı.\(^{144}\) The word Turkoman is freely used; sometimes the Selçukids are called Turkomans, yet there are differences between them. Hasan\(^{145}\) makes a suggestion that the word Turkoman is a compound of Turk+ İman. He also draws a parallel between Turkoman and "Oğuz" basing his argument on the assumption that the empire of Oğuz Yabgu appears under two names, Turkoman and Oğuz.

Sümer's article have thrown a good light on ambiguous words such as Yıva\(^{146}\), Bozulus\(^{147}\), Peçenek\(^{148}\), and Ağac Erileri\(^{149}\) and the Turkish tribes called by these names. He also gives the different spellings of the word Yıva in Arabic letters, and the accounts of the different branches of Bozuls, and the areas to which Bayindirs spread.

Köprülü finds similarities between the words İltutmuş, İlalmış, İlaldi, and Kutalmış and discusses their origin together with an account of the forefathers of the Selçukids.\(^{150}\) He also discusses the different readings of the word Uran; the ethnic origin and political role of the tribe called by this name; the Chinese sources on the Uran tribe and its history after the 12th century.\textsuperscript{151}

Ludwich Leyketi\textsuperscript{152} discusses not only the origin of the word Kirgiz but also also some other words by which the various Turkish tribes are known.

B - Selçukids;

Although the literature on the Selçukids is quite a lot, there are only few articles which are relevant to us. Köprültü in his articles excellently presents the sources and literature on the Selçukids; the catalogues of their coins, the works on their inscriptions, the manuscripts on their history, and the periodicals which have articles on them.\textsuperscript{153}

Turan’s “Selçuklu Kervansarayları”\textsuperscript{154} is a good article on the location and purpose of the caravansaries and the growth of the trade and towns around them.

Şerefeddin’s\textsuperscript{155} article has nothing more than an interesting account of the religious controversy in the Selçukid state during the eleventh century.

C - Artukids;

The main contribution, in Europe, to the history of the Artukids is done by Cahen. In fact he is the first one to have introduced the main sources on them. In one of his articles he has produced a very good genealogical table of the Artukid dynasty and listed the name of the rulers of Meyyafarîkin.\textsuperscript{156} The article in question had been examined and evaluadet by Küprülü \textsuperscript{157} with some additional notes. Köprülü criticises Cahen and for that matter the other European scholars for misreading the words of Turkish origin written in Arabic script.

\textsuperscript{152} L. Leiketie, “Kirgiz Kavm Isminin Menesi”, in Tükiyat Mecmuası, vol. 1, 1925.

Artuk in one of his articles just gives a historical bacground to the one of the mosques built by the Artukids and transcribes the inscriptions on its walls \textsuperscript{158}, but in another article \textsuperscript{159} he presents a short account of their activities in Syria against the Crusades- i.e. a short history of their period from 487/1094 to the death of Emir Balak in Rabī‘ al-Evvel 581/1123.

Sevim’s three articles on the Artukids cover, in more detail, a period of their history upto 516/1122. In the first article \textsuperscript{160} he discusses the lineage of the Artukids and the political activities of Artuk Beg; his participation in the conquest of Diyarbekr and his service to the Selçukid Sultan Tutuş. In the second article \textsuperscript{161} he discusses the political activities of Mu‘in al-Din Sökmen who was the founder of the first Artukid principality at Hisn-ı Keyfa and Mardin. In the third article \textsuperscript{162} Sevim discusses Ilgazi’s political activities before and after he founded the Artukid principality at Mardin, and his battles against the Crusades and Georgians until his death on 17 Ramazan 516/19th November 1122.

\textbf{D - Ayyubids;}

The literature on the period of Ayyubid rule in Diyarberk region is very scant. One of Cahen’s articles only have some information on them in connection with the discussion of a unique manuscript \textit{Nuzhet al-Neżir} \textsuperscript{163}. In this article Cahen discusses the house of Ayyubids of Hisn-

\textsuperscript{163} Supra p. 3.
Keyfa and their activities at Mardin and Meyyafarikin in only few pages.

E - Akkoyunlus;

The Literature on the Akkoyunlus is much more ample than the other dynasties. Erzi draws a parallel between Uzun Hasan's 39th grandfather Bisut mentioned in Kitab-i Diyarbekriyye and Uruc Kocaoğlu Basat of Kitab-i Dede Korkut. He also argues that there is a relationship between the stories in Saltukname and those in Dede Korkut and arrives at a conclusion that the great grandfather (ata) of the Akkoyunlus was Gündüz Alp who, according to Saltukname, came and settled in Erzincan when a branch of Oğuz tribes ran from Horasan before Cengiz Han. The relationship between the Akkoyunlus and Oğuz tribes becomes clear from a document studied by V. Minorsky who also gives a short account of Akkoyunlu rule in Diyarbekr region.

The relations between the Akkoyunlus and the Ottomans only partially discussed by Baykal who bases his argument on Kitab-i Diyarbekriyye and the archives in Topkapı Museum.

Göyünç sketches out the history of Amid, in a very short summary, up to the year when it passed into the hands of Ottomans.

No doubt the most renowned ruler of the Akkoyunlus was Uzun Hasan on whom we can find quite enough information in Arznâme which 165 On Saltukname (the only copy in Topkapi Sarayi Hazine Ktp. No. 1612) see A. Gölpinarlı, Yunus Emre Hayati, Istanbul 1936, pp. 253-270.

---

171 Celal al-Din Devani, “Arznâme”, in Millî Tıtebbular Mecmuası, vol. 5, pp. 273-305; The manuscript containing information on the administrative organisation has fully been transcribed from a copy in Hamidiye Library No. 1438.
is transcribed in Milli Telifular Mecmuasi. One of the best articles written on his political relations with the Ottomans before the conquest of Trebizond is that of Prof. Yaşar Yücel’s who bases his argument on very original sources 171b.

F. Travelling Accounts and Ethnic:

The description of the region by the 19th century travellers such as Brant172, Taylor173, and Garden174 are superfluous and contain nothing new.

The articles of Driver175 who tends to tackle the ethnical and religious dispositions are based on weak sources. Sevgen’s176 article is far from scholarly work and the documents transcribed and transliterated are full of mistakes. Eröz’s177 article is a good piece of scholarly work containing quite good sources and literature, but conveys very little information.

ARmenian And Syrian Sources

The Armenian sources including the ones on our region have been discussed in a quite good detail by Andreasyon178. Among these the ones which include information on Diyarbekr region are the works of Matthew of Edessa179, Kiracos of Gantzac (d. 1272) and Michael, the Syrian.

The only work in Syriac on the area is Bar Hebraeus's universal history a part of which is translated into English by Budge and published in two volumes; the second volume is the fascimile of the Syriac text in the Bodleian manuscript (Hunt 52). In the second volume there is an appendix which gives a short account of Timur Han laying waste to Mardin.

In summary, then, the sources are wanting. There is no single work which gives a full account of any of the dynasties. The periods of the history of Inalids and Beysanids (Nisanids) remain obscure. Apart from the articles of Prof. Yaşar Yücel there is hardly any literature throwing light on the activities of Timur or Şah Isma'il in the area. Most of the facts on the history of Artukids and Ayyubids still lay in manuscripts in libraries. And there is certainly need for the compilation of the all existing inscription in the area.

---

